THE CHORUS OF THE CULTURALISTS

One of the curious by-products of the recent upheaval on the Palestine scene is the emergence of a new cult among us parading under the suggestive name of "Cultural Zionism."

The label "Cultural Zionist" is by no means a new one. Twenty-five or thirty years ago it was worn like a philactery on the brow by almost every "Yeshiva Bochur" in eastern Europe. But to be a "Cultural Zionist" one had to be a student and disciple of Ahad Ha'am. One had to know Jewish history and interpret its significance in terms of a creative process. One had to be a lover of Jewish lore and a dreamer of the visions of its future. Nay, one had to work and make sacrifices to spread Jewish cultural activity, and create a milieu where Jewish culture could thrive.

During the early days of Ahad Ha'amism the protagonists of the cult allowed themselves to stray away from the field of interpretative speculation into the dangerous paths of politics. They took their central idea that Jewish life had significance because it was the breeding ground of a major culture, and sought to convert it into an instrument for grinding out programs and policies for use in the realm of politics. Cultural Zionism was made to serve as a technique for building up Palestine in contradistinction to the methods of Herzlian Zionism. Soon, however, it was discovered that Ahad Ha'amism did not conflict with Herzlianism. It was restored to its function as an interpretation of the urge which impelled men to work for the rebuilding of Palestine. Ahad Ha'am became content to let the Zionists build Palestine, in their own way, resting satisfied that with the creation of a Jewish group life in Palestine, the progression of cultural achievement would naturally follow. During the past fifteen years or thereabouts, Cultural Zionism disappeared entirely from the register of Zionists alignments. It became purely a system of Zionist philosophy.

And now behold we have a new group of people in America vociferating opinions on Zionist affairs from little soap boxes draped with banners bearing Ahad Ha'amistic inscriptions. They shed tears at Israel's plight in his bondage at the hands of the cruel Zionists, and they swear by the beards of the prophet Ahad Ha'am and Judah Magnes to liberate their people from its sad fate.

It is indeed difficult to figure out what relation these new cultural Zionists have to the original members of the cult. Obviously they do not subscribe to any of the basic tenets of the faith. They are not nationalists. Heavens, no! They are not Zionists—they have never been in the camp of those who help to build up the homeland in Palestine. They are not students or devotees of Hebrew culture. Their interpretation of Jewish history, or contemporary Jewish life is antipodal to that of Ahad Ha'am.

The fact of the matter is that they are pure, unadulterated anti-Zionists. And by adopting the pretense of being Zionists of a sort they have become a greater menace to the cause of Palestine than they could have been without the disguise.

The old anti-Zionists did not believe in Zionism. They disagreed with its basic philosophy. They disapproved of its ambitions. They did

THE SAGA OF A SOUL

A Review by Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

Following close upon the heels of that delightfully tender story of early "Childhood in Exile," Shmarya Levin, designated by no less a literary critic that Robert More Lovett as a Jewish Tolstoy or Gorky, has now set down in matchless prose rarely equalled in "vividness of portrayal and literary charm" the deeply moving saga of his "Youth in Revolt." But it is much more than a personal biography which Mr. Levin presents in this new volume,—much more than the intensely interesting story of his many facetted career as student, soldier, Palestinian pioneer, business man, orator, writer, and Zionist propagandist and leader; it is a dynamic narrative of the rise of the entire Russian Jewish populace out of the abject slavery to which they were so cruelly subjected to that freedom and emancipation of the spirit which came with an awakened pride and a consciousness of new capacities and goals, born out of the very depths of their sufferings. Here is the romantic tale of another Exodus undertaken by the children of Israel,—a redemption from the toils and tyranny of Russian Czardom to the Promised Land of a new born appreciation of the Jew's eternal worth and destiny. Here is depicted all the bitter struggle between the assimilationists, those young men and women who, broken under the incredible cruelties and fiendish discrimination of those darkened Czarist days, sought to renounce their Jewish heritage, that they might merge with the sweeping humanitarianisms, socialisms and all embracing democracies of those days and the intense Jewish nationalists, who, to save the Jew from complete disintegration and possible death, clung more stubbornly, and fiercely to their particular and peculiar group, and scorned as specious and unreliable whatever overtures toward cooperation and good will the intolerant world of that day might offer. It was in Zionism that this latter tendency naturally found its deepest outlet, and as Shmarya Levin himself felt that the sole hope for Jewish survival lay in this throbbing movement, he very early found his fondest hope in this cause, devoted himself unsparingly to its success. He became, because of his veritable genius as an orator, one of its foremost spokesmen and utilized his rare natural gifts to further its program.

And it is because Mr. Levin is so wholly bound up with this movement that his description of the conflict between the assimilationists tends to become a bit partial. All the genius which this Russian Jewry produced was to be found in the ranks of the "Lovers of Zion," and their followers. Stupid and superficial seemed most of their foes. Nothing is so blinding as an intense nationalism, and Shmarya Levin, although a superb artist, sometimes permits his fervid loyalties to betray his better and more objective judgment.

But the charm and value of this book lie not alone in its description of the Jewish life in the Russian pale, in the universities of Czardom and Kaiserdom whence Levin later migrated, not alone in the fascinating pen portraits of such internationally famous Jewish leaders as Achad Ha-Am, Mendele Mocher Sephorim, Perez Smolenskin, Leo Pinsker, and a host of other "half legendary heroes of that stormy epoch who have been enshrined forever in the heart of the Jew," not alone in his touching delineation of his native village of Swizlowitz, nor in his artistic presentation of those

Winnipeg Man Wins McGill Fellowship

Alfred Berman, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. I. Berman, 276 Atlantic Ave., Winnipeg, Man., has been awarded a graduate fellowship in political economy offered to students of Western Canada Universities by McGill University. Mr. Berman graduated from St. John's Technical High School in 1925, winning the governor-general's medal for general proficiency. This year he completed the honors course in political economy and mathematics at the University of Manitoba. Besides maintaining a high standard of scholarship he has been prominent in several extra-curricular activities, particularly debating, dramatic and executive work. He has been president of arts dramatics, and in his final year was a member of the Arts Council, secretary of the University Debating Union and secretary of the University Dramatic Society. He was also a member of the Arts Debating Team which visited the University of North Dakota last winter, winning for his university at Grand Forks. Mr. Berman will enter the post-graduate school of political economy at McGill University in October.

Industry is never wholly unfruitful. If it bring not joy with the incoming profit, it will yet banish mischief from thy busied gates. There is a kind of good angel waiting diligence; that ever carries a laurel in her hand to crown her. Fortune, they said of all should not be prayed unto, but with the hands in motion. The bosomed fist beckons the approach of poverty, and leaves besides the noble head unguarded; but the lifted arm does frighten want, and is ever a shield to that noble director. How unworthy was that man of the world that never did aright, but only lived and died.

TALMUD TALES

Carob-Fruit

By GRETA BLOOMHILL

(Concluded from May 30)

"So thou claimest to be that Honi Ha'magel my ancestor about whom it is said that he went on a journey and was eaten by wild animals? And thou would'st have me believe this mad tale thou tellest?" Hanan smiled. "Poor old man! Know that the days of such miracles are past. Moreover, I can show thee the very spot where Honi Ha'magel was killed—there is a tomb erected over his bones."

Honi's last vestige of hope withered before the unveiled amusement in Hanan's eyes and, turning from the house without a word, he hobbled painfully out of the garden gate and down the road again. His thoughts were in a maze—he did not clearly understand what he was going to do. Unconsciously, his steps led him to the Beth Hamidrash. Surely he would be recognised here! In this place where his most precious moments had been spent, and within those sacred walls which had re-echoed to the fame of his scholarship, he would be known and acclaimed. Here the passage of the long years that had fled over the stony roof of his enchanted prison would be annulled by the still greater enchantments of the Torah. God's truth would prevail here, if in no other place.

A glow such as he had not known even when he had trodden his own threshold once more filled him as his feet touched the beloved lintel. The place was humming with life—the wooden platform from which he had so often addressed his eager audience was occupied by a stranger, whose eloquence swayed the crowded listeners as his had once done. Youths, middle-aged men and several greybeards were seated, some on the floor, some on wooden benches, drinking in every word. Now and again one of them arose and answered the speaker, objecting, refuting, quoting text and evidence, corroborating. Amidst the many present they scarcely noticed the wizened long-bearded wreck who stood in the doorway.

The speaker, pausing in his discourse, looked up at the assembly. "I know not what it is to-day, O people, but there is a strange feeling upon me, as if some ancient presence prevailed. The halakoth seem as clear as they were said to be in those distant years when Honi Ha'magel, the Teacher sat in my place."

The decrepit figure in the doorway raised itself and a spark kindled in the shrivelled bones. He had been right! He was known here. The very walls remembered him!

Moving forward so that he came amidst the gathered crowd of students, his thin voice quavering with excitement, he called out: "Honi Ha'magel is here! I am he!"

A lourd murmur passed from mouth to mouth. Every eye was turned upon him, and the speaker bent forward from his platform. But there was incredulity in their glances.

Ah, that would soon change! Wait until he began to tell them. Then the incredulity would change to belief, and they would hail him as one in whom God's marvels were exemplified. With a pathetic smile of assurance he faced them.

"Yes, I am that Honi Ha'magel whom you spoke of. He is not dead, as you think, nay—not dead. The Lord hath chosen him out for a miracle, so that a deep sleep fell upon him and a wall of stone grew around him. For seventy years hath he slept, because he doubted the wisdom of God's ways."

Here he related the story of the carob-trees, ending with, "And I awoke to see the fact verified as the man had said. For the grandchild was eating the fruit of the tree which his forbear had planted. And even so, O people, is it in this house of learning, where every man sows precious seed, the fruit of which future generations shall taste. I in my day sowed much good seed, of the fruit of which ye now partake. But my blessing is above others in that I am returned to behold it in person."

"And to eat, too, meseems!" impertinently retorted one of the youthful students. "If all our ancestors did as thou, old Honi Ha'magel, coming back to life as soon as the trees of their sowing began to bear fruit, there would be but a sorry portion for their decendants!"

There was soft cries of "Sh-sh" among the rest of the students, for they wished to humour the old man in what they imagined was a harmless illusion. But the words had hit home. Honi felt as if a lightning-stroke from heaven itself was in their sound. He realised their full meaning, and all at once the horror of his situation burst upon him.

He alone of all the generations of men—he alone! Each man receiving from his progenitors, and in turn toiling and handing on life and its wherewithal to his offspring. Each man, from Adam the father of death, down through the countless generations. He alone—Honi Ha'magel—having inherited from his father, sleeping slothfully through years of his children's toil, and now waking to taste of its fruit with his withered, toothless gums. He had outlived his time, he was the rotting branch that refuses to fall and sans the vitality of the young shoots.

There was a numb pain at his breast and a blinding light before his eyes, which he followed. It led him out of the house of learning into the road again. He crawled on until the hum of voices was faint in the distance, while slow cold tears trickled from his eyes and down his long beard. He scarcely had strength to drag himself along, yet there seemed a quenchless vigour in his limbs. Would it always be thus? Was he doomed to drag himself like this through the coming centuries of weary time, an object of scorn and derision, a by-word amongst all who toiled for the future—an eternal vindication of the wisdom of that universal law which he in his folly had dared to doubt? He could not bear to think. The sunlight from the blue sky seemed to jeer at him, the blithe songs of the birds rang with a strange sound upon his ears. On and on he dragged himself, bent almost double. He had ceased to think now, and knew only a dull sense of suffering. At last his sunken limbs refused to carry him any longer. In utter exhaustion, he sank to the ground and lay inert where he fell.

When his gaze moved upwards it met the soft gleam of sunshine filtering through interlaced boughs of shining leathery leaflets. Amidst them glossy clusters of purple pods swayed and rustled, hanging pendant like strange jewels—magical counterparts of those gems for which their seeds were used as weights.* Hazily it dawned upon him that he was in the carob-grove once more. He closed his eyes against the sights and sounds of nature, and prayed silently. His lips refused either word or motion, but in his weary soul there was a poignant cry for release. Gradually he began to feel a weakening of even that. Enveloped in a growing [illegible], all sounds seemed to be slowly receding further and further away, like waves of some shadowy, retreating sea—the tinkle of the asses' bells, the far-away [illegible]-calls, the slight soughing of the wind in the branches, even the faint sound of his own breathing. All his pulses were weakening as if they were being borne away—away on the dim receding tide. . . .

Slowly the sun travelled lower in the heavens, till it sank over the horizon's [illegible] rim; slowly the dusk deepened into night and the stars shone forth in all their splendour. In that hour when all the world of men is silent in slumber, a quiver passed over the [illegible] above Honi's head, and rose as a passionate prayer to heaven. At that moment a star dashed across the sky, brightening as it fell, and from a thousand points of meteoric fire over the body of Honi Ha'maagel.

The [illegible]-leaves stirred not, their branches motionless, as if their voiceless prayer for pity had been heard.

In the morning the owner of the carob-grove found a little heap of grey ashes at the foot of the tallest tree.

"A fire has burnt here," he said.

He trod the ashes with his foot, and they dissolved into the dust around them, leaving not a trace of the glowing heap such they had once embodied.

GROUP INVESTMENT AS APPLIED TO REAL ESTATE

Since the armistice in 1918 the trend in Industry has been towards merger and consolidation of interests. Through this plan of operation many great new corporations have come into being which through the power of merged dollars, minds and interests have resulted in a revolutionary change in the business world. This plan has brought to industry lower operating costs, greater volume of production, more economic methods of marketing and a higher wage scale for their employees.

It was only natural that this plan should eventually be applied to real Estate. First introduced in New York it was exceptionally successful. These methods of operation were found ideal to cope with extremely high property values, which had shut the door of Realty Investment to the man of moderate means. The Group Investment plan was the instrument through which these small investors were enabled to once more invest in Manhattan Real Estate. This plan was so successful that it was soon adopted by Realtors all over the U.S.A.

It was only natural that the Group Investment Plan as applied to Real Estate should find its way to Canada and especially Montreal where Realty Conditions are very similar to those existing in the United States. This plan was introduced by the Wilder-Bermingham Investment Corporation, which has just issued a very enlightening and handsome booklet explaining the operation of this method of investment. The Capital Stock of the Corporation is divided into 2,500 shares of Preferred Stock with a par value of $100. each and 5,000 shares of Common Stock, without nominal or par value. The preferred stock will carry a dividend of 7% and a non-cumulative dividend of 3% per annum before any dividends are payable on the Common Stock.

The officers of the company at the present time are J. E. Wilder, one of Montreal's best known realty men, who for forty years operated Wilder's Limited, the well known furniture store. F. J. Bermingham, General Manager of the Wilder-Bermingham Realty Co., is the Vice President, is well known in Montreal as an energetic capable and popular realtor who has been associated with Mr. Wilder for many years. Directors are John Irwin, president of the McColl Oil Company Limited, a $25,000,000.00 corporation, operating in Canada from coast to coast, J. F. McPherson, vice president of the Geo. A Fuller Co. of Canada Limited, nationally known firm of contractors who have built many of Montreal's finest buildings including Windsor (C.P.R.) station, Royal Bank, Bell Telephone and Dominion Square Buildings. J. H. Sherrard, Chairman of the board of Simmons Limited, makers of Simmons Beds, and President of the Consolidated Pipe Co. and M. A. Phelan, K.C., the popular and well known advocate, senior partner of the legal firm of Pleet, Phelan & Co.

With a board comprising men of this character there is little doubt but that the Wilder Bermingham Investment Corporation will be more than successful.

CAMP SCOPUS

A hundred and fifty guests enjoyed the wonderful activities at Camp Scopus, an adult camp on Lake George, last week-end. Tennis, horse back riding, golf, swimming and boating claimed their devotees. During the evenings, several one-act plays were presented in the social hall, under the direction of the dramatic coach, Clifford Odett, formerly of the Theatre Guild, N. Y., who will be in charge of the little theatre at Scopus all summer. Miss Raye Keenan, danseuse, of Folies Bergere in Paris and of Madrid arranged a programme of interesting dances. She will conduct classes in dancing at the camp all summer. The athletic instructor, Gordon Leibovitz, arranged a tennis tournament and several outdoor hand and volley ball games. Camp Scopus, the adult camp of distinction, offers a splendid vacation to all.

Encouragement and development of thrift is a noble work, for it teaches men to exercise thought and prudence, to forecast future wants, and to provide for them out of present opportunities.

McINTYRE-PORCUPINE

The eighteenth annual report of McIntyre Porcupine Mines, Limited, for the year ending March 31, 1930, describes a period of uninterrupted and satisfactory progress, says President J. P. Bickell. Gross production and earnings exceed any figure previously established. Ore reserves now gross $19,417,424 with average grade of $8.30 per ton. Comparing this total with $16,179,205 of $8. grade, as reported in the previous year, and having regard for this year's gross mine production of $4,657,188 it will be seen that the ore developed in the period under review had an estimated gross value of $7,895,407.

VIPOND CONSOLIDATED

According to latest reports Vipond has encountered their No. 426 vein on the 500-foot level, where it is said to show 12 feet of good ore. This vein is another of the veins that extend into the property adjoining Hollinger.

GRANADA ROUYN

A new producer will most likely make its appearance in Quebec this month. Towards the end of June the new mill at Granada should turn over. It is proposed to treat 50 tons daily at first with a gradual step-up to 100 tons later on. It will likely take three or four months to get a real line on what the property is capable of.

STADACONA ROUYN

It is rumored that Stadacona Rouyn Mines has been successful in arranging further financing. Operations at the property were at an interesting stage when lack of funds forced the management to shut down. Recent activity in the stock may be attributed to this rumor.

TECK HUGHES

More talk is heard of an early increase in mill capacity at the Teck-Hughes. A 350-ton step up, to 1,250 tons daily, is proposed. Extra profits from such an addition would be just so much extra as the dividend of 60 cents per share per annum is now being earned comfortably on present capacity.

SHERRITT-GORDON

Good progress is reported from the Sherritt Gordon operation where attention is confined to developing the known ore bodies. The principal work is being carried out on the Ook claim where the main shaft has been put down to 500 feet. It is reported that drifting on this level has progressed over 150 feet to the west, where a section of ore is said to have been cut for a distance of 21 feet. On the same level to the east, the drift is reported in over 350 feet, with 13 feet of ore carrying 3.45 per cent copper has been cut. Drifting is also being carried out east and west at the 375-foot level. A crusher station is being prepared at the 250-foot level of the east shaft.

NORANDA MINES

It is understood that Noranda is smelting ore that yields $7.00 per ton in gold in addition to regular copper

Brazilian Traction, Light & Power Co. Report

As was generally expected from the month to month statements during the period, very marked expansions in earnings are shown in the Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Co. for the year ended December 31, 1929. Common share earnings for the year were equal to $2.93, against $2.56 last year and $10.45 on the old $100 par value stock in 1927.

Based on an average milreis exchange rate of 11.97 for the year against 12.06 in 1928, gross operating earnings of the company's subsidiaries amounted to $49,351,215, against $42,774,813 in 1928, and $38,319,319 in 1927, the last during a year when the milreis averaged 11.96 cents. Net operating earnings are shown at $28,052,961, against $24,869,330 last year, and with the addition of miscellaneous revenue at $281,998 total income is $28,334,859. Bond interest and reserves totalling $11,150,325 leaves a balance of $17,184,634, this being revenue to Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Co. Addition of earned interest, $420,545 makes a gross revenue of $17,605,179, and after deduction therefrom of general expenses and amortization totalling $744,083, a net revenue is shown of $16,861,096, against last year's item of $14,121,604. Preferred dividends accounted for $30,462, and common dividends, $11,471,108, the latter compared with $8,013,752 last year, leaving a surplus on the year's operations of $3,559,526, against $6,053,460 in 1928.

A sharp increase in assets reflects too, the further expansions of the company during the year, and also reflects for the first time, the acquisition by the Brazilian Company of the City of Santos Improvements, for which, it will be remembered, $14,000,000 was paid, this item accounting for its share of the growth in assets, which are shown in the current report at $368,956,553, against $328,812,356 of a year ago.

ASBESTOS CORPORATION

Postponement until January 1 1933 is proposed by Asbestos Corporation, Limited, in regard to interest payments due July and January next on its general mortgage bond and an extension of time until January 1st, 1933, is proposed in respect to the sinking fund instalment of January 1st, 1931.

CANADIAN CONVERTERS

Reflecting higher operating costs a contraction in good demand in a generally difficult period reduced earnings are indicated in the annual financial statement of Canadian Converters for the fiscal year ended April 30th, 1930. In the face of this wide depression, however, a strong balance sheet was well maintained.

Profit for the year amounted to $104,788, against $166,268 in the preceding year. Provision for depreciation at $17,500 left a net profit of $87,288, making it necessary to appropriate $34,057 from profit and loss balance to pay the year's dividend requirements, a deficit for the year remained of $34,057, and a previous surplus brought forward of $673,218 left a profit and loss balance of $639,162.

VENTURES, LIMITED

Following the recent statement of drilling results at their Opemiska property, given out by Ventures, Limited, it is reported that the consulting engineer, J. Gordon Hardy, is now looking over the work. To date the drill results have been entirely encouraging. Some word should be available upon Mr. Hardy's return.

NORDON CORPORATION

According to present plans of the company, Nordon shares will be listed on the New York Curb this week. All obstacles in the way of listing were removed at the special shareholders' meeting recently.

CALMONT OILS

The flow at Calmont No. 2 is said to be fluctuating so much that accurate production figures are impossible to obtain. It is said to have made 400 barrels in one half-day, at the rate of 800 daily, when flowing normally. When ice forms the back pressure is increased and this thaws out the well and brings it back to normal without using the drill. It may take several days experimenting with back pressure to keep up the full flow. From present indications an output of 800 barrels daily would appear reasonable, according to word from Calgary. The No. 4 well is now down over 4,000 feet, between the Home and Dalhousie sands. No. 7 well is down to 4,575 feet, near the Dalhousie.

MAYLAND OILS

Mayland No. 1 well, which was frozen off for a few days, is reported back again with a flow of about 11,000,000 cubit feet. This appears larger than formerly when some 55 barrels daily were being produced.

WINNIPEG ELECTRIC

Continued growth in power load of Winnipeg and district is evidenced in the earnings statements of Winnipeg Electric Company and its subsidiary, the Manitoba Power Company. In the case of the Winnipeg Electric Company, however, the increase in power earnings was offset by a decrease in the earnings from the railway utility.

Net earnings of Manitoba Power Company for the month of April, as compared with the month of April 1929, showed an increase of $8,027 bringing the total increase in net for the four months up to $11,609. Practically all of the power developed by Manitoba Power Company is supplied to Winnipeg Electric Company, Winnipeg City Hydro and the Manitoba Pulp and Paper Company.

PERFECTION GLASS

In forwarding the 1929 annual report of Perfection Glass Company, Limited, to shareholders, President A. W. Holmstead states the objective of $1,000,000 in sales for 1929 was reached but that net profit resulting from these sales was disappointingly small, amounting to $37,696. This net was arrived at before providing for income tax. As there was a deficit on the books at the beginning of the year of $123,175, this deficit has now been reduced to $85,479.

NIAGARA WIRE WEAVING

Indicated earnings of $2.19 per share of common stock is shown in the annual report of the Niagara Wire Weaving Co. Ltd., covering the first year's operations for the 12 months ended March 31, 1930.

Net profits after all expenses, depreciation and income taxes, appears at $172,844. After adjustments of $9,007, payment of preferred dividends of $66,000, common dividends of $40,000 and appropriation of profits for retirement of preference shares, a surplus remained of $21,537.

CANADA PAVING

Canada Paving and Supply Corporation, Limited, preferred and common stocks of which are listed on the Toronto Curb Market, has just secured a contract approximating $250,000 from the County of Kent, for laying a concrete, black base, macadam pavement on a ten mile stretch between Chatham and Dover, Ont. Work in connection with this contract will get under way within a fortnight and will take a considerable portion of the present season to complete. It will require a large amount of equipment which the contractors have readily available.

BARCELONA TRACTION

Net revenue of Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Co. Ltd. for the year 1929, available for dividends, amounted to $2,905,036 according to the annual statement, just released, showing a substantial gain over 1928. After allowing for the 70% dividends on the preferred stock, amounting to $1,763,538 the residue left applicable to the combined preferred (which is participating) and the common shares was $1,141,498 equal to $2.12 per share.

ENGLISH ELECTRIC

An increase in profits of almost 50 percent and substantial improvement in working capital are revealed in the annual statement of English Electric Company of Canada, Limited, for the year ended December 31st, 1929, which was presented to shareholders at the annual meeting of the company held in Montreal. The favorable progress made by the company in meeting the requirements of consumers of electrical equipment in this country is outlined in the following comments of R. A. Stinson, president.

Congratulations are due the Montreal Y M H A for its proposed Urban Camp for boys. It is planned to supply recreation to 1,000 boys during the summer and registration is going on daily at the Y until July 1st. when the camp is opened. Boys who are unable to go to the country will join in camp activities in the Y M H A building and on the mountain. Lecturers from the Department of the Interior will carry on instruction in nature study and conduct trips over the mountain where the boys will learn about birds, trees and flowers. Physical instruction will include swimming, baseball, sports and games. There will be instruction in Arts and handicrafts. The boys will be taught to build aeroplane models, bird houses and boats, and to do soap carving and clay modelling. The Urban Camp will be in session during the afternoons of five week days for seven weeks. Each group will be comprised of twenty boys under the constant supervision of a trained counsellor. As a substitute for a holiday in the country the Urban Camp plan is unique. It is to be hoped that many boys take advantage of its program.

There was no lubricant in the letter from F. C. Nano, charge d'affaires of the Roumanian legation in Washington, to Bernard D. Richards, executive director of the American Jewish Congress. His warning to the Jews of America to keep quiet about anti-Semitic outbreaks in Roumania is plain without the grease and floral decorations that usually characterize documents of the sort. Mr. Nano is peevish and there is a note of irritation in his communication which is a treat in a way. The Roumanian Jewish situation does not change except to grow worse temporarily every now and then and smooth explanations from the Roumanian representatives in this country run true to form, too. But Mr. Nano's letter is worth knowing about because its candor makes it different.

Instead of bending low and expressing nothing but the deepest regret Mr. Nano suggests that: "Even if all the stories of anti-Jewish excesses were true, still it seems to me that under present conditions it would be to the ultimate interest of the Jews to ignore the undoubtedly regrettable cases in which some few Jews have been beaten or their shops looted in order to ensure for the vast majority the possibility of earning a good living, instead of doing everything to perpetuate the misery of the great mass of Jews." Mr. Nano says that the Jews, in the eyes of a great many people, occupy the position of scapegoat. The years following the war Jews represented a high percentage of the national student body. Commerce and banking are monopolized by the Jews and a part of the population ascribes their inability to buy the goods they need from the Jewish traders to usury and profiteering. So anti-Semitism has grown since the war. What Mr. Nano calls anti-Roumanian campaigns in this country are highly detrimental to Roumanian Jews, he says. These campaigns make Roumania's recovery from economic difficulty slower and they add weight to the argument that Jews are at heart incurably hostile and should be terrorized until a great number leave Roumania. Therefore Mr. Nano urges Jewish leaders to oppose anti-Roumanian sentiment because the American financial market is so powerful as to help bring about the economic improvement of Roumania, and thus better the condition of the Jews.

From Mr. Nano's point of view criticism in this country against Roumanian anti-Jewish outbreaks and general ill treatment and discrimination of various kinds means that Jews here are "doing everything to perpetuate the misery of the great mass of Jews." As a practical policy they should do everything they can for Roumania so that some time or other in the dim future when Roumania recovers the Jews will have it good, as the saying goes. Mr. Nano may be right but isn't it asking too much to demand that even Jews be superhuman? Jews in this country, of Roumanian descent and others, boil with indignation, chagrin and despair when "some few Jews" are beaten their shops looted. Even if, with silence, they could buy peace for their Roumanian brethern, the price might come too high in repression and humiliation. They have an idea that the Roumanian Government could stop excesses and certainly the verbal excesses of anti-Semitic professors, if it wanted to. They know that the surest way to influence the Roumanian Government is through the pocketbook. It is most natural then for Jews in this country to want to damage Roumania's chance with the bankers unless Roumania behaves first. It is most unnatural for a people to espouse a policy so subversive of self-respect as the one Mr. Nano favors.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

New Girls' Camp Committee Organized

The Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Toronto have purchased a site at Camperdown, Ont., seven miles west of Collingwood on Georgian Bay for the activities of the Fresh Air Cottage, formerly at Whitby. A modern girls' camp capable of housing 500 girls during the season will be organized. The camp will be open from July 14th. to August 11th., and 120 girls in two parties of 60 each will be received.

The site and the buildings were formerly used as a demonstration and training camp by the National Council of the Y.W.C.A. There are 26 acres of bush and playing fields with over 1000 ft. of lake front, swimming, hiking and camping facilities. The following committee have been appointed: Chairman, Mrs. Meyer Brenner; Vice-Chairman, Mrs. H. Marks; Treasurer, Miss Adelaide E Cohen; Secretary, Miss Albena Simonsky; and Mrs. P. Hermant, Miss L. Levy, Mrs. Harry Samuel, Mrs. Charles Dralmin, J. I. Oelbaum. Martin M. Cohn, Director. Mrs. Jos. Cohn has been appointed Camp Mother and Miss Beulah Hutner, Counsellor in charge of the swimming programme. Miss Hutner has won a number of life saving awards.

There are a limited number of openings for Counsellors. Girls 18 years of age and over who are good swimmers and who wish to become counsellors, apply to Mr. Cohn, 218 Simcoe St. Ad. 2985.

fevered cities of Kiev and Moscow and Berlin, but much of this volume's worth is to be discovered in the excellent insight it affords into the Russia of the pre-Revolutionary days. Particularly valuable, therefore, ought this document to be in this hour when Russia occupies the very forefront of world attention.

(Concluded next week)

The rasping notes of the new Ahad Ha'amist chorus are now dimming on all sides. Recently this journal treated us to a tune by a Mr. Charles Joseph of Pittsburg. Was heard the same refrain: "I Charles Joseph, believe in a homeland for the Jews in Palestine, but not in a 'the homeland'. The Arabs are a lovely people, but those accursed political Zionists are causing all the trouble. If you don't believe me ask Vincent Shean of the New York World." This Joseph has many brethren. And they all prattle the same lines. And there is a danger that after hearing this song over and over again the pubic may begin to believe it just as it was made to believe for a time that it was short of bananas.

"Ahad-Ha'amists", "cultural Zionists"—our masqueraders in their eagerness to do damage to Zionism have hit upon the device of taking up the abandoned trenches of the old camp, and now they snipe away at Zionism from their protected positions at close range. A.B.R.

BOOK I: THE HERITAGE

"What have I to do any more with idols?"

CHAPTER I

Long before the word conveyed anything to her, Carlie knew there was a Delavan Tradition. After a while meanings emerged: The Tradition was the thing you talked about when you wanted to get an apartment for less rent than they asked, or more credit than the butcher wished to give, or admission, at any price, to Miss Orianna Calvert's Select School for Young Ladies on Riverside Drive. But when you were at Granpa's and mama was saying she didn't see how she could manage new winter coats for the children this year, and Aunt Henny was telling her it was no use to hint, because that husband of hers had turned miser and wouldn't give her another cent for the family, Granpa always began to talk about the Gruenturm Heritage.

When Carlie was seven she asked Don why they didn't sell the Tradition and the Heritage and get winter coats for everyone instead of begging for Aunt Henny's old clothes. Don told her a tradition was the bunk, and a heritage was what Mother Eve had left folks and it made everything pleasant come out badly like candy putting holes in your teeth so you had to go to the dentist. But Tress said a heritage was money and the Gruenturm Heritage was more money than any other family in all the world had ever been able to pile up: millions and billions and maybe quadrillions of dollars. She added virtuously that a tradition was supposed to keep a boy from telling lies to his little sister.

"If you piled the whole park full of quarters, would that be as much as the Heritage?" Carlie asked.

Tress seized upon the idea; she made it her own. "If you piled Central Park full of little five-dollar gold pieces, and laid dimes in the paths where the pebbles are now, and hung dollar bills on all the trees in place of leaves, that might be almost as much as the Heritage."

"What sillies girls are!" Don said. "I'd swap your silly park full of gold pieces for about half a dozen good old five-dollar bills in each hand right now. Then I'd have something; instead of just talking about something I didn't have, I'd have something I could be sure of."

"You'd not be sure of anything for long." The verdict came from Tress. "You'd spend your handful of money for boy's foolishness and then where would you be?"

"If you weren't a girl I'd show you where I'd be. And you'd be somewhere you aren't thinking to be with your smarty ideas, Tress Delavan."

Don glowered, Tress sniffed, Carlie spoke pacifically. "When Don gets big enough, he will go and get the Heritage for us, Tress."

"Certainly I'll go get it. I'll have to be the one to go. Papa and Uncle Michael are chained to the store. Granpa likes talking better than doing things. And the Gruenturms wouldn't listen to girls like you or Henriette. So I'll have to go."

"Where will you get the money to go get the money?" Tress mocked, dancing around him in the pebbled path of their short cut from the west side of the park to Granpa's boarding house on Madison Avenue at 116th Street.

"I'll borrow it from Uncle Fred. Or maybe Uncle Michael and papa will make enough in the crockery business to buy me a ticket to London. And coming back I'll be rich enough to buy a whole boat."

"Hurry and grow up!" Tress urged.

But when Carlie was almost twelve and Tress and Don were fifteen, Uncle Michael and Aunt Sara went to London to claim the Heritage. They were the parents of Tress and Henriette, who was quite grown and had a beau named Dr. Pancoast of The-Pancoasts-my-dear.

Even if the Heritage was as much as a park full of gold pieces, going abroad to claim it made everyone poorer than ever. Uncle Michael gave up his apartment on 98th Street and sold the furniture, saying he could use cash better than chairs and carpets right now; papa talked more than ever about being chained to the crockery business and told mama to go a mile slow until Michael got back with the fortune and they could swing things; and Aunt Henny kept reminding everyone that if Uncle Fred hadn't been most generous the trip would never have been possible, and of course she was doing her share and more in giving Henriette a home.

"Which means you can't count on your weekly dollar from that miserly aunt of yours, children," mama said bitterly. But she was still more bitter when Don wanted to sell papers after school.

Carlie came closer than ever before to Tress in those days, because Tress had been sent to live with Granpa at the boarding house and Carlie and Don went to see Granpa every afternoon. Rudnick's Kosher Boarding House was the last straw, Tress said. It was filled with Katzensteins and Weingartens and Abramovitches, and there wasn't any excuse for Granpa's living in such a place. Wasn't he a Delavan?

Carlie said yes he was, but it didn't seem to be doing him much good, and maybe if you were a Gruenturm at heart and were always thinking about your inheritance, it was natural to want to live with people who were probably something like the Gruenturms.

"You funny little Puss!" Tress said. "You're darling to be taking me home to supper again tonight even if you don't understand how I feel about eating at the Rudnick's."

"I understand very well," Carlie answered her. "The food is greasy and the tablecloth isn't always clean and your eyes are younger than Granpa's, so you see the coffee stains and they annoy you because you're as beautiful and as delicate as the princess who felt the pea through twenty featherbeds and mattresses and so was proved a princess in spite of her rags."

Tress, whose name was Theresa Babette Gruenturm Delavan, and who wrote it Thérèse Betty, gave Carlie a sudden vigorous hug. "Sometimes I think you understand everything about us better than I in spite of your mother's being an O'Donnel. Or maybe that's it. You're not close enough to mind."

"Does Aunt Sara's being an Oppenheimer make you mind more?" Carlie asked shrewdly.

"Much more. Look how pleased with herself Henriette is because she's going to be a Pancoast as soon as her Georgie gets out of Medical. And he's only a shrimp with a peaked nose and damp hands and Granpa says he wouldn't trust him with a sick cat. But he is a way out and Henriette is glad to take him."

"A way out of what? Henreitte isn't living at the Rudnick's."

"Charlotte Delavan, I never know if you're as innocent as those big blue eyes of yours make you look. Papa says that in spite of your Irish eyes and Spanish hair and all the things that make you so un-Gruenturm, you're the Gruenturmiest of us all."

"Does he mean strong and brave and fearless like them, Tress?"

"He means sharp like them, Carlie. But don't you mind living way up on Amsterdam Avenue and eating supper when everybody else is having dinner and wearing Aunt Henny's hand-me-downs and being nobody and having people take you up because your name is Delavan and throw you down when they discover that Granpa lives at Rudnick's and goes to a synagogue and calls it schule?"

"Does it really matter, Tress? You can see the Park from one of our windows and aren't we nice enough for people to like just on account of our being us and haven't we each other for chums anyway?"

"Things will be different when mama and papa come home with our share of the money."

"And then Don can have his violin lessons and I can study modeling at the Art Institute and probably later on we'll go to Italy and come back great and famous. And what will you do, Tress?"

"I'll not work, I promise you. Why should any of us work when we are heirs to one of the greatest fortunes in the world?"

Carlie was not able to answer that. There were a great many questions she asked herself and could not answer. The Gruenturms were important people; Don was always finding things about them in the paper; everybody knew their name and nobody knew Delavan; but you were proud to be Delavan and you didn't want anything Gruenturm except some money all your letters had never persuaded them to share with you. They didn't want to give you anything; they didn't even want to claim you. They were very grand and were proud to be Jews; you were nobody at all and were ashamed of having what papa called a few drops of Jewish blood. Was being ashamed of so many things what made you nobody at all? Carlie thought she would try being proud instead, and so she wrote her name in all her schoolbooks; "Charlotte Gruenturm Delavan." She wrote it in dashing blue ink and was sorry about it later, since she had to be at great pains to hide her work from Don and Tress for fear they would ask why she had spelled "Gruenturm" out for everyone to see.

Carlie did not want to tell. She wanted to keep her feelings locked up in the tangled labyrinth inside her heart where words didn't grow. If the labyrinth had been inside her head, she might have found a way of straightening it out in neat sentences with subjects and predicates and clauses you could use for explaining things. But her dreams were shy; they ran into her heart and hid when she tried to capture them and put them into words for Tress or Don to hear.

One of Carlie's secret dreams was woven around something Granpa had told of a street that got locked up at night so the people inside couldn't get out. The people outside hated the ones in the street so much that they made heavy gates and set them at either end and barred the street at night so that it became a prison. Carlie thought she'd rather be shut inside the chained street than hate anybody enough to lock him in. She made up a terrible yet fascinating game of being shut into the street and of doing a noble deed so the gates swung open for her and the jailers bowed and said they would do whatsoever she asked even unto giving half their fortunes; so she said they must let all the people out and take away the gates and never lock anyone into the street again.

Carlie thought about the prison street often until at last she knew precisely how it looked. On either side of the cobbled pavement there were narrow little brown houses with tiny shuttered windows; the heavy blinds did not open even when it was day, the houses huddled together as if they were afraid, and the people who lived in them huddled together too; the people had eyes that were shuttered and half closed like the windows—or like the eagle in the park, the eagle who was chained and couldn't fly and who sat blinking at you with narrow eyes that never quite said if he hated you so much he'd like to get free and hurt you, or if he despised you so much he'd like to fly so far away he wouldn't have to be bothered seeing you any more.

There was a picture of a Ghetto Street in a picture book Granpa had shown Carlie once. Beneath it was printed: "A Relic of The Dark Ages." The heavy eaves of the medieval houses squatting in the dark cobbled alleyway made Carlie glad she lived in a Light Age. But sometimes she wondered if there were still chained streets in the world. . . . Wondered and was afraid to ask.

CHAPTER II

On an April day in 1912 the Delavan children were sitting on the front stoop of the Rudnick boarding house waiting for it to be four o'clock so Granpa would wake from his nap. Granpa was eighty-seven now and slept every day on the couch at the foot of his big walnut bed in the alcove that jutted out from the side of his room. He always lay on his back with his rickety old hands folded over the garnet velvet border of the crazy-quilt his mother had made when he was a boy. He slept with a white silk handkerchief over his face, with little bubbles rising from the middle of it the way candy comes up in thick puffs when it is ready to take off the stove.
